

Crashing Stocks. Mobile Firms. Shredded Safety Nets. Growing Inequality...
Is globalization reducing the capacity of citizens and workers to influence their employers and governments?

Popular Power in a Global Age:

New repertoires
for the rest of us

Repertoire: the inventory of available means for collective action

Frances Fox Piven

Speaking at the CJTC–Anne Neufeld Levin Spring Lecture

Monday, April 30, 2001
Kresge Town Hall, 7:00 pm

Center for Justice, Tolerance
& Community University of California
Santa Cruz

Dr. Fox Piven, Distinguished Professor of Political Science and Sociology at the City University of New York, is a scholar-activist of the first order. Her books, co-authored with Richard Cloward, include Regulating the Poor, The New Class War, and Why Americans Don't Vote, and she has been a leading strategist for the welfare rights and voter registration movements.

Additional Sponsors:

Center for Cultural Studies, Center for Global, International and Regional Studies, Colleges Nine and Ten, Community Studies, Education, History of Consciousness, Latin American and Latino Studies, Politics, Psychology, Sociology, Women's Studies.

For more information or to accommodate a disability, contact the CJTC at 459-4783
or cjtc@cats.ucsc.edu